Government to take responsibility of Grenfell Tower site

Kensington and Chelsea Council has welcomed the announcement that the government will take responsibility for the Grenfell Tower site from the Metropolitan Police. The Council has always maintained that it should have no part in any day-to-day operations.

The announcement comes after the Metropolitan Police confirmed it has completed the forensic investigation of Grenfell Tower, which means the Tower is no longer required as a crime scene.

The government will now make operational decisions on issues such as the site’s safety, security and access arrangements, until the future of the site has been determined by the community. A formal agreement will be finalised in the autumn.

As these arrangements are put in place, the site will continue to be managed by the independent Site Management team who have been in place since July 2017.

Led by Doug Patterson, Chief Executive of the London Borough of Bromley, the team is responsible for all aspects of the on-going day-to-day management, such as health and safety and security. This ensures the Council will continue to take no role in making decisions regarding the site.

The local policing team will continue to work closely with the Site Management team and patrol the surrounding area to protect the integrity of the site.

The Council has always been clear that in the long term, it is for the Grenfell community – the bereaved, survivors and residents – to decide on the future of the tower site. The community must have full control to shape the legacy of Grenfell following this tragedy. Earlier this year the Council signed up to a set of principles with the government committing to this and this remains our position.

Council responds to government announcement on fire doors

Kensington and Chelsea Council has responded to the government’s announcement earlier this week that fire doors from five different suppliers have been identified as failing to meet requisite fire performance standards.

You can find the government’s full announcement on the gov.uk website: bit.ly/2Ox2S5T

The announcement states that the fire doors failed due to not being tested on both sides, as the regulations stipulate. All councils, landlords and anyone in charge of buildings anywhere in the country will be asked to take action if these doors have been used or installed.

The Council knows that this will be concerning for residents. It is constantly reviewing the fire safety of its housing stock, and checks will continue to see if any of the named doors have been fitted to homes and urgent action will be taken where necessary.

The new homes for Grenfell Tower families have been checked and the Council can confirm that it has not fitted any of the named doors to the new permanent homes of Grenfell survivors.

It is also embarking on a programme to replace 4,000 fire doors across its estates, at a cost of £3.5m. The Council has been clear, it will only put in doors that have passed all safety checks and if it is confident they are tested to the very highest standards.

The Council is also liaising with housing associations to ensure blocks are either not affected or to ensure that urgent changes are made. Temporary homes and general housing stock will also be checked.

Have your say on overnight support services

The Grenfell Night Support Service that has been provided from Notting Hill Methodist Church will remain fully operational in its current location until further notice.

Meanwhile, the Council and Central North West London NHS are working with the community to assess what they need in terms of overnight health and emotional support.

In addition to this review of community based overnight support, the Council’s Community Engagement Team will be undertaking a community consultation exercise over the summer, the results of this will help guide and inform our work with the wider community to support recovery. More information on this will follow soon.

New leaflets to support children affected by Grenfell

The leaflets have been produced by the team of psychological therapists at the NHS Grenfell Health and Wellbeing Service. In the ‘Trauma Clinic for children and young people’ leaflet you can find out how the team screen, assess and support young people by providing trauma-focussed therapy, and how to get a referral to the clinic.

You can also find out how to get in touch with the team who specialise in supporting children and adolescents who have experienced trauma.
